Read it aloud several times using different voices – a high pitched squeaky voice; a low deep voice; a strained voice.
Read each line several times and try emphasising different words each time.
Record yourself reading the poem or find a recording of the poem that you like. Play it on a loop and read along with it.
Highlight any interesting patterns of sound or words. Use these to help you remember the structure and shape of the poem.
Make up movements and gestures to help you memorize your poem.
Write your poem out by hand, decorate each part with pictures and display it - then picture it when you recite it.
The Memory Temple

The Memory Temple is an ancient technique for memorization in which you associate the things you want to remember with a sequence of images located in a familiar building, such as your house. To recall the information, you mentally walk through the building, see the images and recall what is associated with them.
